

STOP BEING AWKWARD

How to Talk to Anyone, Make Friends and Feel Confident Naturally

A simple, practical guide for people who overthink every conversation

Copyright and Disclaimer

Copyright © 2026. All rights reserved.

You may not copy, reproduce, share, or resell this ebook, in whole or in part, without permission from the author.

This ebook is created for educational and personal development purposes. Its aim is to help readers improve their communication skills, confidence, and social interactions through practical advice and exercises. Every person and every situation is different, so the results you get will depend on how you apply these ideas and how much you practise them.

This book is not a substitute for professional advice. If shyness or social anxiety is seriously affecting your daily life, please consider speaking with a qualified counsellor or mental health professional.

Contents

	Welcome	4
1	Why Do You Feel Awkward?	6
2	The Biggest Enemy Is Overthinking	9
3	How to Start a Conversation	11
4	How to Keep a Conversation Going	14
5	What to Say When Your Mind Goes Blank	17
6	How to Become More Interesting	20
7	How to Handle Awkward Silence	22
8	How to Look More Confident	24
9	How to Make New Friends	26
10	Stop Being Awkward While Texting	28
11	Talking to Someone You Like	31
12	What If They Don't Like You?	33
13	30 Conversation Starters	35
14	The 7 Day Challenge	39
	You Were Never Too Awkward	41
	Quick Cheat Sheet	43
	Thank You	44

Welcome

Let's be honest for a moment.

Have you ever wanted to talk to someone, and your brain suddenly stopped working? You stand there thinking all kinds of things.

Kya bolu?

What do I say?

Agar awkward ho gaya toh?

What if it gets awkward?

Agar usne weird samjha toh?

What if they think I'm weird?

Conversation khatam ho gayi toh?

What if the conversation just ends?

And because you are thinking so much, you end up saying nothing at all.

If that sounds familiar, please don't worry. You are not broken. You are not boring. And you are definitely not the only person who feels this way.

Here is the truth. You don't need to become a different person. You don't need a fake personality, and you don't need to become the loudest person in the room. You simply need to stop making every conversation feel like an exam.

What this book will help you do

- ✓ Start conversations naturally
- ✓ Stop overthinking every word
- ✓ Handle awkward silence
- ✓ Keep conversations going
- ✓ Make new friends
- ✓ Text without sounding boring
- ✓ Feel more confident around people
- ✓ Handle rejection and embarrassment

How to use this book

The chapters are short on purpose. Read them in order, because each one builds on the one before it, and most end with a short summary of the main ideas. Near the end you will find 30 conversation starters and a 7 day challenge.

Reading gives you the ideas, but practice is what makes them work, so try things out as you go. You don't need to get any of it perfect. One small step at a time is enough.

So take a deep breath. Let's fix this.

Why Do You Feel Awkward?

First, let's get one thing clear. Feeling awkward does not mean you are an awkward person. It only means that there are certain social situations where you feel uncomfortable, and that is a very different thing.

Think about how you are with your best friend. You can talk for hours. You joke around, you say silly things, and you never stop to check a sentence before it leaves your mouth. Now put yourself in front of a stranger, and suddenly it feels like this.

System Error. Brain Not Found.

So what changed? You are the same person, with the same sense of humour. The biggest difference is usually that around new people, you start thinking too much.

When you are with someone you trust, you don't keep asking yourself whether that sentence was good, whether you should have said something else, or why they looked at you like that. Around new people, your brain becomes a security guard. It checks every word, every movement, and every reaction. That constant checking is where awkwardness begins.

The fear of judgment

Most awkwardness comes down to one question. What will they think about me?

Behind that question there are usually a few smaller worries. You might sound stupid. Your joke might fail. Your voice might sound strange. You might say the wrong thing, or they might simply not like you.

Here is something worth knowing, though. Most people are busy worrying about themselves. The person you are talking to may be quietly wondering whether they sound weird too. So you end up with two people who are both nervous, both trying hard to look normal, and both convinced that the other one is judging them.

The fear of silence

Another big reason people feel awkward is silence. A pause of two seconds happens, and your mind goes straight into panic mode.

But silence is not always a bad sign. You don't have to fill every second with words, because normal conversations have pauses in them. Confident people are not the ones who never face silence. They are the ones who stay relaxed when it shows up. We will look at this properly in Chapter 7.

REMEMBER

Silence is only awkward when you decide that it is awkward.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Feeling awkward is a reaction to certain situations. It is not who you are.
- The main cause is overthinking how you are coming across.
- Most people are just as nervous as you are, and silence is a normal part of conversation.

The Biggest Enemy Is Overthinking

Imagine you are about to message someone. You type Hey! and then delete it. You type Hi, how are you? and delete that too. Then What's up? and that goes as well. Ten minutes later, you still haven't sent anything.

Welcome to overthinking.

Why overthinking makes you awkward

Overthinking pulls your attention onto yourself. Instead of wondering what this person is like, you start wondering how you look right now. Instead of being curious, you are performing.

And conversations become difficult the moment you treat them like performances. It is hard to listen to someone properly while you are busy marking your own performance.

Stop trying to say the perfect thing

There is no perfect sentence. There is no magic opening line that guarantees someone will like you. Sometimes you will say something funny, and sometimes it won't land. Both are normal.

The goal is not perfection. The goal is connection.

The Five Second Countdown

When you want to say something, don't give your brain thirty minutes to talk you out of it. Try this instead. Think of the small thing you want to do, count down from five, and then do it.

Say you want to say hello to someone. You count down, and then you say it.

That is all there is to it. The more quickly you take small actions, the less time overthinking has to take control.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Overthinking turns your attention onto yourself and makes conversation feel like a performance.
- Aim for connection, not the perfect sentence.
- Count down from five and take the small action before your mind can argue.

How to Start a Conversation

Most people believe you need confidence before you can start a conversation. It actually works the other way around. You build confidence by starting conversations, even small ones.

The simple formula

Whenever you are unsure how to begin, use three steps.

The question at the end matters most, because it hands the conversation to the other person and gives them something to answer.

In college

You notice someone carrying a thick book for a difficult subject.

OBSERVE They are carrying a heavy book.

COMMENT That subject looks painful already.

QUESTION Is the exam difficult too?

Just like that, you have a natural conversation.

At the gym

Instead of saying Hi and then standing there in silence, try something connected to the place you are both in.

INSTEAD OF Hi.

TRY THIS How long have you been coming here? I'm still trying to understand half of these machines.

It is simple, natural, and relevant to the situation.

Online

Instead of sending a plain Hi, Hello, or Hey dear, try something connected to their content.

INSTEAD OF Hi. Hello. Hey dear.

TRY THIS Okay, serious question. Is that place actually as good as it looks in your story?

Now the person has something to answer.

IMPORTANT

Don't try to impress everyone. Just start naturally.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- You build confidence by starting, so start small.
- Observe something, comment on it, then ask a question.
- Use what is around you or what they have shared, so it feels natural.

How to Keep a Conversation Going

Starting is not the only problem. Sometimes the conversation begins well, and then this happens.

YOU So what do you do?

THEM Student.

YOU Oh.

And the conversation is dead.

The ALRA Method

ALRA stands for Ask, Listen, Relate, and Ask again.

Here is how it looks in a real conversation.

YOU What kind of movies do you like?

THEM Horror movies.

YOU Seriously? I can't even watch horror movies alone.
What's the best one you've watched?

See what happened there? You asked something, you listened to the answer, you related it to your own experience, and then you asked another question that grew out of what they said. That creates flow, because each reply gives the other person something new to respond to.

Don't turn it into an interview

Here is a conversation nobody enjoys.

AVOID THIS What's your name?
 Where do you live?
 What do you study?
 What is your hobby?

Congratulations. You have become a police officer.

Instead of firing questions one after another, react to the answers. Let your personality show, and share something of your own too. A conversation is like a game of catch, where both people throw and both people catch. It is not an interrogation.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Use Ask, Listen, Relate, Ask to keep things moving.
- React to what they say before you move on to your next question.
- Share something about yourself so it feels like a conversation and not an interview.

What to Say When Your Mind Goes Blank

This happens to everyone. You are talking, everything is going well, and suddenly there is nothing. Your brain has completely disappeared.

Don't panic. You have more to work with than you think, and a lot of it is right around you.

The Environment Method

Look around. What is happening? Where are you? What looks interesting? Whatever you notice can become a topic.

AT A PARTY How do you know everyone here?

AT COLLEGE Are you actually understanding this lecture, or are you just pretending like me?

AT THE GYM What's the hardest exercise for you? Mine is definitely leg day.

TRAVELLING Have you been here before?

Your surroundings give you an almost unlimited supply of things to talk about.

The FORD Method

If you truly don't know what to talk about, think of four areas. Family, Occupation, Recreation, and Dreams.

F

Family

Are you the oldest or the youngest in your family?

O

Occupation

What do you do, or what are you studying?

R

Recreation

What do you like to do when you are free?

D

Dreams

What would you love to do someday?

You don't have to ask personal questions straight away. Start with the lighter areas, like recreation, and let the conversation move deeper on its own. Use FORD together with the ALRA Method from the last chapter so that it never feels like an interview.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- When your mind goes blank, look around and talk about what you see.
- If nothing comes to mind, think FORD, which stands for Family, Occupation, Recreation, and Dreams.
- Start with light topics and go deeper only as the conversation allows.

How to Become More Interesting

Here is something many people don't realise. Interesting people don't always have exciting lives. More often, they are people who know how to share their experiences with a bit of personality.

Don't just give facts

Say someone asks how your trip was. A boring answer and a better one might look like this.

INSTEAD OF It was good.

TRY THIS

It was amazing, but I almost missed my train because I woke up late. That was probably the most stressful ten minutes of my life.

See the difference? The second answer gives the other person something to react to. They can laugh, ask what happened, or tell you about a time the same thing happened to them. The first answer gives them nowhere to go.

Use small stories

You don't need crazy adventures. Everyday life is full of small stories. Maybe something funny happened, you made a mistake, you saw something strange, or you learned something interesting. Share it.

Stay curious

Interesting people are usually curious people. Ask yourself why something is happening, how it works, and what is interesting about the person in front of you. Curiosity improves conversations almost automatically.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- You don't need an exciting life. You need to share everyday experiences with some personality.
- Give the other person something to react to, not just facts.
- Curiosity about the world and the person in front of you improves every conversation.

How to Handle Awkward Silence

Let's destroy a big myth. Silence does not mean the conversation has failed.

Sometimes the other person needs a moment to think. Sometimes they are simply comfortable. Sometimes there just isn't anything to say at that moment, and that is completely okay.

Don't panic

The worst thing you can do is panic and start saying random things. Instead, smile, stay relaxed, and look around for a moment. Then bring up something new in a natural way. A few simple transitions can do this for you.

TRY SAYING Anyway, random question...
 That reminds me...
 By the way...

Small phrases like these can restart a conversation without any drama. If your mind has gone completely blank, the Environment Method and FORD from Chapter 5 will give you something to say.

The Silence Challenge

The next time you are talking to someone, allow three seconds of silence. Don't rush to fill it. Three seconds can feel very long the first time, but you are teaching your brain that silence is not dangerous.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Silence does not mean the conversation has failed.
- Stay relaxed, smile, and use a simple transition when you are ready to move on.
- Let three seconds of quiet pass now and then, so your brain learns that it is safe.

How to Look More Confident

You don't need to look like a movie star. A few small changes can make a big difference to how relaxed you look, and to how relaxed you feel.

1

Stand straight

Don't shrink yourself. Relax your shoulders and keep your posture natural.

2

Make comfortable eye contact

Don't stare into someone's soul. Just keep natural eye contact while you talk, and look away now and then, the way anyone normally would.

3

Smile naturally

A small, genuine smile makes you look more approachable.

4

Stop fidgeting so much

If you are constantly checking your phone, touching your face, or moving your hands nervously, your body is showing anxiety. Take a breath and slow down.

IMPORTANT

Confidence is not about looking aggressive.
Confidence looks relaxed.

How to Make New Friends

Friendship rarely happens because of one amazing conversation. It usually grows from two things, repeated interactions and good energy.

You see someone regularly. You talk a little. Then you talk again. Slowly you discover what you have in common, and over time a friendship develops.

Don't force friendship

You don't need to become best friends immediately. Start small and let it build in steps.

- 1 Say hello
- 2 Have a short conversation
- 3 Talk again another day
- 4 Find common interests
- 5 Spend time together

None of these steps is big or scary on its own, and that is the point. Each one is small enough to feel comfortable.

The secret is to be interested

People usually enjoy talking to someone who genuinely listens. So listen, and remember the small things they tell you.

For example, you might ask How did your exam go? That one question shows you remembered something they mentioned earlier, and that is what creates connection.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Friendships grow through repeated small interactions, not one perfect conversation.
- Take it one step at a time.
- Listen closely and remember the small details people share.

Stop Being Awkward While Texting

Texting can be difficult because you can't see the other person's face or hear their tone. With so little to go on, it is easy to overthink every message.

Don't overuse boring questions

Some messages become automatic, especially these three.

Kya kar rahe ho?

What are you doing?

Khana khaya?

Have you eaten?

Aur batao.

So, what else is new?

These aren't terrible questions. But if you send them every day, the conversation gets boring quickly.

Try open questions

An open question can't be answered with a simple yes or no, so it gives the other person room to say more.

INSTEAD OF Did you watch the movie?

TRY THIS Was that movie actually good, or did the trailer completely fool everyone?

INSTEAD OF How was your day?

TRY THIS What was the most interesting thing that happened today?

A more interesting question leads to a better conversation.

Don't force replies

If someone keeps replying with Yes, No, Okay, or Hmm, don't fight for your life trying to keep the conversation alive. They may be busy, tired, or just not in the mood to chat. A conversation needs two people, and it is fine to let it rest and try again another day.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Texting hides tone and expression, so keep your messages easy to reply to and a little interesting.
- Swap routine questions for open questions.
- You can't keep a conversation alive alone, so let it rest when replies stay short.

Talking to Someone You Like

This is where awkwardness becomes ten times stronger. You see someone you find attractive, and suddenly your normal personality disappears.

Stop putting them on a pedestal

They are a human being, just like you. Don't think I have to impress them. Think Let's see if we actually get along.

This changes everything. You are no longer trying to pass a test. You are simply finding out whether the two of you click.

Don't try too hard

You don't need fake confidence, a fake personality, expensive flexing, or constant compliments. Just talk normally.

A simple starter

Skip the complicated pickup lines and use something natural from the situation. For example, if you often see them listening to music before class, you could say this.

TRY THIS

*You're always listening to music before class.
What are you listening to these days?*

Simple beats cringe every time.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- They are a person, not a test you have to pass.
- Keep your normal personality and skip the fake confidence.
- Start with something real from the situation you share.

What If They Don't Like You?

Here is an uncomfortable truth. Not everyone will like you, and that is completely normal. You don't like every person you meet either, so why would everyone automatically like you?

Rejection doesn't define you

Someone might turn you down because they are not interested, because they are busy, because they have different preferences, or because the timing isn't right.

None of that automatically means I'm boring or I'm ugly or Nobody likes me. Don't create a whole movie in your head out of one rejection.

The best response

Accept it, respect it, and move forward.

REAL CONFIDENCE

Real confidence is not believing that everyone likes you. It is knowing that you'll be okay even if someone doesn't.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Rejection is normal. It happens to everyone, not just you.
- A no is rarely about your worth. It is usually about fit, timing, or the other person.
- Accept it, respect it, and move on to the next conversation.

30 Conversation Starters

Use these naturally, and don't memorise them like a robot. Pick the ones that suit you, change the wording so it sounds like you, and use them when the moment fits.

GENERAL

- 1 Random question, what's something you're currently obsessed with?
- 2 What's the best thing you've watched recently?
- 3 If you could travel anywhere tomorrow, where would you go?
- 4 What's something everyone likes but you secretly don't?
- 5 What's the funniest thing that happened to you recently?
- 6 What's your most useless talent?
- 7 If you could instantly learn one skill, what would it be?
- 8 What's your comfort food?
- 9 What's one thing you've always wanted to try?
- 10 What's the most random thing on your phone?

COLLEGE AND SCHOOL

- 11 Are you actually prepared for this exam?
- 12 Which subject do you hate the most?
- 13 How are you surviving this class?
- 14 Have you started the assignment yet?
- 15 Who's your favourite teacher?

WITH FRIENDS

- 16 What's your ideal weekend?
- 17 What's the funniest memory you have?
- 18 What's something we should try someday?
- 19 What's your dream job?
- 20 What would you do if you suddenly became rich?

ONLINE

- 21 Okay, I need an honest opinion about something...
- 22 Your story made me curious. What happened there?
- 23 Random question...
- 24 I need a recommendation. What's something worth watching?
- 25 That actually looks interesting. How was it?

FUN QUESTIONS

- 26 What's the weirdest food combination you like?
- 27 If your life was a movie, what would the title be?
- 28 What's your biggest unnecessary fear?
- 29 What's the weirdest thing you've searched online?
- 30 If you had one completely free day, what would you do?

REMEMBER

A starter only opens the door. Once the other person answers, use the ALRA Method from Chapter 4 to keep the conversation going.

The 7 Day Challenge

Reading this book will not change your life. Practice will. So here is your challenge, one small action for each of the next seven days.

DAY

1

The Smile Challenge

Smile at three people today. Don't force it, just be friendly.

DAY

2

Say Hello

Say Hi or Hello to someone you normally wouldn't talk to. That's it. Small action.

DAY

3

Ask One Question

Start one small conversation by asking a genuine question.

DAY

4

Keep a Conversation Going

Use the ALRA Method (Ask, Listen, Relate, Ask) once today.

DAY

5

Stop Running From Silence

Allow a few seconds of silence without panicking. Relax.

DAY

6

Share Something About Yourself

Tell someone a small story. It can be something funny, something interesting, or something that happened recently.

DAY

7

Start a Real Conversation

Talk to someone new. Don't try to be perfect, and don't try to impress them. Just be curious, and start.

If a day feels too big, do a smaller version of it and keep going. What matters is that you keep moving.

You Were Never Too Awkward

Let's finish with something important.

You may have spent years thinking I'm just awkward. But that is not your identity. It is a feeling, and feelings can change.

Every confident person you see today was once a beginner at something. People become better at conversations by having conversations. They become less nervous by facing the situations that make them nervous. And they become confident by taking action before they feel completely ready.

So stop waiting for the perfect moment. Stop waiting for the perfect sentence. Stop waiting until you feel completely confident, because confidence often comes after action, not before it.

You don't need to be perfect. You don't need everyone to like you. You don't need to say something amazing. You simply need to show up. Talk, listen, make mistakes, learn from them, and try again.

One day you will look back and realise that the conversations that once made you nervous now feel completely normal. That is when you will understand what really happened.

You didn't become a different person.
You just stopped being afraid to be yourself.

Quick Cheat Sheet

Come back to this page whenever you need a reminder.

WHEN YOU DON'T KNOW WHAT TO SAY

Observe. Comment. Question.

WHEN THE CONVERSATION IS DYING

Ask. Listen. Relate. Ask.

WHEN YOUR MIND GOES BLANK

Look around you, or think FORD.

WHEN YOU'RE OVERTHINKING

Count down from five, then act.

WHEN THERE IS SILENCE

Relax. Silence is normal.

WHEN YOU FEAR REJECTION

Not everyone has to like you.

Thank You

Thank you for reading Stop Being Awkward.

Remember, you don't need to be the loudest person. You don't need a fake personality. You don't need perfect words. You just need practice.

Start small.

Stay curious.

Stop overthinking.

And start talking.

STOP BEING AWKWARD